More than 500 real-world teams, including the official kits, stadiums and players. More than 500 real-world teams, including the official kits, stadiums and players. What's New in FIFA 22? The game introduces the brand new Position Jump system, a feature pioneered by FIFA 19 that adds more power to player movements. This is going to be a new standard in football games, making it easy for players to choose where they want to move as well as how high they want to move. It will also allow players to be more flexible and anticipate their opponents while on the run. Players will now be able to dive in high risk situations to try and win the ball off of their opponent. Players will now change their basic running to match their need. Switches will occur through the use of a new 'dual-zones' system, when a player remains in a closed space, he can make changes to his style. The more a player is away from goal in their own half, the more intelligent this system will become. One of the key features of the all-new defensive system is the introduction of AI teammates. It will actively push players away from danger more often. Players will also be more aware of where their teammates are and they will now attempt to make plays in areas that have greater space, rather than remaining glued to the defensive line. Player ratings are based on the majority of player data gathered throughout the previous season of competition. This will allow players to be much more challenging to score against. Players will also have a greater variety of skills and abilities and be more dynamic with the ball at their feet. In addition to player ratings, clubs have been given significant attention in FIFA 22. The addition of a 'transfers window' and team budget will allow for
