It is used for hosting HTML / ASP / ASP.Net / PHP / CMS.NET / Python / Java / ColdFusion...Recent advances in the development of polymers as a delivery platform for antisense and other oligonucleotides. Antisense and other oligonucleotides are commonly used tools in molecular biology and other experimental disciplines. As a result of their potential for the treatment of various human diseases, oligonucleotides have emerged as promising drugs for future therapeutic applications. The primary aim of this review is to present a clear overview of new developments in the development of polymeric delivery systems for antisense oligonucleotides. Some of the recent focus has been on the enhancement of antisense activity by improvements in the chemical properties of the cargo such as the stabilization of the oligonucleotide by cationic modifications or the conjugation of a payload such as a peptide ligand or an alkylating agent. Antisense oligonucleotides can be conjugated with various biodegradable and non-biodegradable polymers to make them more efficient for transport into cells. Alternatively, a number of alternative approaches have been studied that include the use of

Alternatively, a number of alternative approaches have been studied that include the use of degradable oligonucleotide-polymer conjugates. The majority of the reviewed works deal with the synthesis and characterization of the formulated oligonucleotide-polymer conjugates (OPCs). A few studies are also included that discuss the delivery of OPCs in cell culture and vivo. Vicki Banda Vicki Banda (born 14 October 1945) is a British harpist, composer, arranger, music producer and teacher. Early life Vicki Banda was born in Reading, Berkshire, England and is the daughter of the social worker Shirley Goodchild, who first took the young Vicki to meet the harpist and composer Eileen Joyce. After hearing Joyce play Banda became determined to play the harp herself. Joyce encouraged her and arranged for Banda to attend the Royal College of Music. There, she studied with Harold Craxton and was a fellow student of John Tavener. She went on to graduate from the Royal Academy of Music with a Master of Music degree in 1970. Career Banda has appeared as soloist with the BBC Philharmonic
